HRK Hochschulrektorenkonferenz

Die Stimme der Hochschulen

07.11.2025

Author

DILL, David D.

Title

Allowing the market to rule: the case of the United States

Publication year

2003

Source/Footnote

In: Higher education quarterly. - 57 (2003) 2, S. 136 - 157

Inventory number

17103

Keywords

Ausland: USA: Hochschulwesen allgemein; Hochschule: Privathochschule; Hochschule und

Gesellschaft; Hochschule und Wirtschaft

Abstract

There are increasing calls in the UK and other countries for deregulating universities so that they can better compete in the global market for higher education. Frequent allusions are made to the superiority of the US market-oriented system. But is market competition for first degrees in the US efficient for the larger society? Do the constantly increasing social expenditures for higher education in the US benefit the public interest or do they advantage certain students and faculty members? Two recent economic studies provide greater insight into the impacts of market competition on US higher education. The results of these studies are discussed and their possible implications for higher education policy making in other countries are explored. (HRK / Abstract übernommen)