

02.4.2026

Author

TAPPER, Ted (PALFREYMAN, David)

Title

The collegial tradition in the age of mass higher education / Ted Tapper ; David Palfreyman

Publisher

Dordrecht [u.a.] : Springer Netherland, 2010

Collation

XIII, 187 S.

Publication year

2010

ISBN

978-90-481-9153-6

Inventory number

76112

Keywords

Hochschulen : allgemein ; Hochschule : Idee und Aufgabe ; Hochschule : gegenwärtige Situation ; Hochschule und Staat : allgemein ; Hochschule : Wettbewerb ; Ausland : Großbritannien : einzelne Hochschulen ; Ausland : Großbritannien : Forschung, Hochschullehrer ; Ausland : USA : einzelne Hochschulen

Abstract

This book will examine the relationship between collegiality and the collegial tradition in the context of the development of mass higher education. The collegial tradition in higher education has been shaped above all by the collegiate universities. In all its various forms (as commensality, as a mode of governance, and as a critical force in shaping the process of teaching, learning and research) the collegial tradition has found sustenance in many sectors of higher education. It may well be that the tradition as expressed in these forms now has more strength and depth in the non-collegiate than in the collegiate universities. This work will give a fuller picture of the present-day character of British (especially English) higher education. Although this is a book that will rely particularly upon the Oxford experience of collegiality, there will be extensive comparative and international reference to the idea of collegiality, the various challenges to it that have emerged within different national systems, and the contrasting patterns of adjustment to those challenges. (HRK / Abstract übernommen)

02.4.2026

Signature

W 01 TAPP